Executive Summary

- The growth in consumer prices in 2007 put an end to government plans of keeping the inflation rate at 7–8%.
- The positive trends of office real estate development in Moscow and St Petersburg seen in Q3 2007 are set to continue into the future. In Moscow, the growth in demand for rental property is increasing hand-in-hand with the growth in property supply.
- The average hotel room cost in Moscow is still one of the highest in Europe. At the same time, the occupancy rate in the 3–5 star segments is relatively low. There is still a deficit of “modern type” average-price guest accommodation in Moscow.
- During the first three quarters of 2007 the St Petersburg office market has experienced stable growth of average rents together with a decrease in the amount of vacant spaces. This indicates that the growth in supply lags behind the growth in demand.
- During the Q3 2007 the total volume of Class A warehousing property in St Petersburg has increased by over twice. This was mainly due to the commissioning of the MLP Utkina Zavod’ (72,000 sq m) and PNK-2 (40,000 sq m) complexes.
- The St Petersburg hotel market is still characterized by the lack of growth in property supply. From July to September this year, apart from mini-hotels, there has been only one hotel (3 star offering 49 rooms) that entered the market.

“The world oil prices for Brent have, for the first time, surpassed the $80 per barrel barrier”

Economy Overview

Key Events

- On 24 July, the federal legislation act N221–F3 “On state cadastral register of real estate” was accepted. According to the new law, there will be a unified system of data and documents, relating to any real estate on the territory of the Russian Federation. The new legislation is valid from the 1 March 2008.
- On 16 August, Fitch, the international ratings agency, confirmed Russia’s ranking as a BBB+ country with a stable development forecast. Among the country’s strengths the agency noted state funds and low level of foreign debt. According to Fitch, the budget reform and the division of the Stabilization Fund will tighten control over spending and help to overcome possible economic shocks if oil prices suddenly drop. These reforms together with high oil prices and increased level of investment compensate for structural weaknesses of Russian economy, which include the banking sector, business environment and dependence on energy prices.

Economic growth and inflation

According to the Ministry of Economic Development of the Russian Federation, from January to August 2007, the growth of GDP, compared with the same period of the previous year, was 7.7% (against 6.2% in 2006).

The accumulated inflation rate for the 9–months period was estimated to be 7.5%, slightly higher than 7.2% in the previous year. The government’s plans to keep the inflation rate at 7–8% in 2007 now seem improbable. The more realistic objective would be to keep inflation at 9%. This negative performance has broken the trend of lowering inflation since 1998.

Foreign Exchange Reserves and Stabilization Fund

In Q3 2007 the level of growth of the Foreign Exchange Reserves was lower than in the first six months of the year. Weekly growth was estimated to be 0.4%, going down by 0.9%.

The world oil prices for Brent have, for the first time, surpassed the $80 per barrel barrier, 43% growth since the beginning of the year.

As a result, there has been a further increase in the Russia’s Stabilization Fund, the average growth of which since the beginning of 2007 is estimated to be 5.3%.
